Mr Potts was broken into on the 12th inst. that the property of some of the Chinese servar to was extracted. We are also inferred of the digging of a large canal on the South Bank, just above the British Concession. This is intended for the shelter of Native craft from the North winds when the proclamation ordering them to quit the North side shall be enforced; the water being far too deep to admit of their anchoring in tiers, as is gonorally their custom. The Authorities seem to be going to work in real entrest, and have about 2,000 men almost constantly digging. The work however gannot be properly completed under two years. out the earnl which already exists between these two places. The authorities at Nunking have issued an edice taking off all duties from silks &c., weven thete for five years. Already this has produced an effect, not less than 2,500 silk loums alone having been established s lso there are said to be some six or seven hundred extra home at work. The number of Junks on the North Bank has also increased in a marvelous degree, even within the last two months they have gone from manist - a landred up to hearly two thousand, extending all along the ri ver bank for muro' than a mile, in tiers of 18 t 23 deep. It is tens they are principally Sal Junks, but the effect of their presence is shown by the increase of more than double, the quantity t opinm kind other goods imported. I have been prepared for this verdict ever since I was arrested, although thought it my duty to fight the British Gavernment inch by inch-to dispute every inch. I felt I was sure to be found guilty, since the advisers of the Grown took what the Attorney-General was ploased the other day to call the " meraiful course." Of course I thought I might have a fair chance of escaping so long as the capital charge was impending over me, but when they resolved on trying me under the Treason Felony Act I felt that I had not the alightest emallest chance. I am somewhat embarrassed at the prerent moment as to what I should say, Under the circumstances, there are a great many things Stausser & Co., that I would wish to say, but feeling that there Apply to are other persons in the same situation with my self, and that I might allow mysell to say semething injudicious which would peril their gnees. AN EXAMPLE NOT TO BE FORGOTTEN .- Hefore leaving England he (the King of the Belgians) had placed in Lord Gray's hands a letter describing his arrangements with regard to his pension; to Claremont, and to the Coloneley of the oth Dragoon Guarda. The letter was characteristic of the bonoumble and considerate nature of the writer. As Sovereign of Belgium, he declined to draw any money from the British Exchange. When his outstanding debts had been paid, be d'sired that as much of his pension as should be necessary for the purpose should be applied to the maintenance of the estate of Claremont, and the payment of salaries and allowances to his former servants, as well as of those charitable enboriptions which either the Princess CHARLOTTE OF himself had been accustomed to make. The rest of the money was to be returned to the Treasury. Prince Lauroup also resigned the coloneles of the 5th Dragoon Guards. The saving to England from King Lauroup's delioney and disinterestedness was no less than £35,000 a year .- Pall Mall

Ruskin on ART .- Mr. Ruskin gave an address to the members of the Working Men's College the other dey on Art. At the present time in this country, he said, Art was gelting ignoble as well us noble. True, we had our Thamas enabankment; but we were marring its beauty by putting a railway upon it. We had gasometers that blew up and chimness that blew down. No diabt when we had done one best, it was very provok ing to be criticised, but he was naturally a grum. bler, and he had come there to grumble. Competition was, he institud, the great curse of England, for competition would keep any one from excelling in any graceful thing or any sub- rate terms. the thing. It was the love of gain that prompted commercial men of the present ago to sacrifice beauty to mere mechanical detail. They were like pige grubbing for routs. It was the love of actting more roots than their fellow pigs. Now, in matters of art, it was impossible to complete with another, and the only thing a man could do was to make the best use of the gills given to him instruct of borrowing and trying to imitate the gifts of others. In every one there was that which made initiation impossible. And is this lay the true soutce of independence, for independence was the developing of our own gifts and not depending on those above us Mr. Kuskin declared that the three days preceding the annual opening of the Royal Academy were days of shame, for then might be seen artists of merit trying to out-colour one another by the power of sermillion. He asserted that he had never seen the portrait of a beautiful English girl; and while there were such noble and levely creatures in England we were content to have rulgar representatives of them. Beauty was sacrified to the middle of February."
